Marte Johnslie: Forms of Protest

Emerging artist Marte Johnslie explores how abstraction and contemplation can form tools to create a personal space of action. Responding to people's increased interest in mindfulness and meditation practices, activities seemingly at odds with protest and action, Johnslie shows a new project resulting from a process of testing the relevance of Buddhist practice and theory in contemporary art production. By questioning the common belief of both abstraction and meditation practices as means of withdrawal, Johnslie is presenting the idea of spirituality and abstraction as the opposite: a way to connect.

Her interest in finding connections between social involvement, spiritualism, and art motivated Johnslie to visit the first Tibetan Buddhist Center established in the Western world, Samye Ling in Scotland in 2013.

Forms of Protest consists of four installations, two of which are produced according to Vajradharma Art, a philosophy of art taught by one of the center's founders, Chögyam Trungpa.

Christine Istad and Lisa Pacini: Travelling Sun

IstadPacini ArtLab brings the sun to HOK in November

In an amazing art project and road movie, Christine Istad and Lisa Pacini embarked on an art journey to bring the sun to the darkest part of Norway in the winter months. In 2012, Istad and Pacini transported the SUN sculpture on an open flatbed trailer on a journey to Tromsø, Northern Norway, where the sun is below the horizon line for two months. The journey is documented with film and photography.

Istad-Pacini's intention with this project is to evoke a discussion about the importance of the sun and or the lack of it, document the exotic nature of the travel, and share it with the general public in their blog. The sun has travelled to Tromsø Contemporary Art Center, has travelled on the Hurtigruten Coastal Liner, to Bergen's USF Wharf, and then a quick trip to London to represent Norway in 100% Norway in London. The trip from Bergen to Rjukan marks the last stop on the road trip, before ultimately ending on the facade of the Henie Onstad Kunstsenter in November.

Traveling Sun has received press both in Norway and abroad, and the lighting of the sun here coincides with both the autumn's major symposium Blurring Boundaries and Bridging Gaps, and the exhibition opening Marte Johnslie's Forms of Protest, as well as the opening of the Christmas season in the shop and the art center.

Henie Onstad Kunstsenter is proud to present the artist Christopher Nielsen (b. 1963) and his astonishing and provocative world. Visitors will also have the opportunity to experience the premier of Nielsen's monumental installation Disamusement Park and a new version of his animated film The Escalator.

- Few artists have critiqued and caricatured Norway's welfare society and the folly of its citizens with such fearlessness and imagination as Christopher Nielsen. He is a storyteller, satirist, and draftsman of international stature, say Lars Mørch Finborud and Lasse Marhaug, the exhibition's curators.

Long and multifaceted career

During the 1980s Christopher Nielsen was renowned for his comics in such publications as Gateavisa, Nye Takter, and Brage, and for his close collaboration with the band Jocke & Valentinerne. In the 1990s Nielsen's comic series about the Narvere, To trøtte typer, and Hold Brillan were ubiquitous, and through the 2000s his artistic activity burgeoned with a feature film, Slipp Jimmy Fri (Free Jimmy), dramatic work for the Norwegian National Theatre, and installation art at Statens Kunstutstilling and Dortmund Bodega. In 2014 Nielsen debuted as an author with the critically acclaimed science fiction novel Metamorphosis.

The exhibition is paired with an extensive concert and film program coordinated by the featured figure himself, in collaboration with HOK's curators. A comprehensive catalogue of the exhibition is being published by No Comprendo Press.
